

WELL

Well is sited in the courtyard of the Intensive Care unit at the New Children's Hospital in Westmead, Sydney. A contemplative pool of water flows in a series of delicate standing waves inwards towards a central well.

The double-sided perforated brass screen provides much needed privacy for parents and nurses who share the use of the courtyard. The screen is lit internally at night and creates a moiré effect as the viewer moves in relation to the wave-like pattern of its perforations.

Artists
Jennifer Turpin

Date
1995

Description
Kinetic water sculpture

Materials
Perforated brass screen -10 metres long x 2.5 metres high, elliptical pool sandstone capping - 6 metres long x .5 metres high

Location
The New Children's Hospital, Westmead, Sydney

Client
The Royal Alexandra Hospital for Children